LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF THE WAR

Correspondence of the Associated Press

HEADQUARTERS OF THE RUSSIAN ARMY OF THE CENTER, Jan. 24.—One of the most perilous branches of army service in Russia is that of mounted scouts, an organization peculiar to the Siberian corps. There are one hundred of these scouts to each regiment, and a harder, more daring lot of rough riders would be hard to find. They are for the most part plainmen, whose life has been spent in the open and on horseback.

This organization played an important part in the Japanese war where by their impetuous attacks they saved the Russian troops in many instances from heavy losses. After the Japanese war they were disbanded, but with the outbreak of the present conflict, were reorganized by Captain Benjamin Pessotsky, who became their commander. During the recent months while the Russians and Germans have been facing each other in the trenches these scouts frequently have raided the German lines and during the last week in November on the eastern front they bagged a German staff, consisting of two generals, a doctor and six non-commissioned officers. A colonel and many soldiers were killed in the action.

The following incidents concerning the scouts' activities earlier in the war were given by an officer at the front who participated in events related.

At 3 o'clock on the afternoon of September 29th the last companies of the first division left their positions before Warsaw to take up others behind the defenses of the city. The entire defense of the city was left to the Siberian scouts. Commander Pessotsky, who had remained with the scouts, took upon himself to order his men to spread out and occupy the left wing of the positions between Yulanova and Nova Ivitchni, in front of a woods.

The Germans began to advance on Novo Ivitchni, sending a flying column in front. Pessotsky ordered his men to open fire. The German column to their surprise began to fall back, firing. Pessotsky got on top of a small house and through his glasses observed the enemy, ordering changes in position to give the impression that the trenches were fully manned. The Germans began shelling the village and the house where he was. In face of this, he sent an officer to the rear, saying that he was holding the position and asking that reinforcements be sent. The enemy began pressing forward in force, but Pessotsky's heroic action had given time for the whole Russian column to move forward again and by a flanking movement, to drive back the Germans. This was the beginning of the German retreat that ended at their frontier.

It may also be said that during this war the Russian Red Cross has done more than ever could have been expected of it. The doctors, surgeons and sisters, on the other hand, and the volunteer organizations on the other have worked with marvellous efficiency.

One of the most interesting phases of the work is the operation of the flying columns, which move along with the army and work while engagements are in progress. In each flying column there is an officer in charge with all the rights of a military commander of a separate military unit, although he may come from civil life. Besides him there are two or three aides. The medical side of the organization is represented by three surgeons, eight students and two sisters. One hundred and eighty men to each column are assigned and trained to the work required of them, from the ranks of enlisted men. The column has also a large number of sanitary carriages, several field kitchens, field operating rooms and in case of necessity tents to live in.

During battle the column is divided into three sections. The commander either mounted or afoot, moves forward with the sanitarians, as near as possible to the trenches. Sometimes they locate in the trenches themselves. Very often when trenches or positions change hands the flying column has to stay on until the last, to take away the wounded in spite of the danger of falling into the enemy's hands. Two columns have been entirely destroyed by the fire of the enemy, and several have been captured, to say nothing of individual losses among other columns. Not only have they to bring first aid to the trenches, but frequently they must transport the wounded in their sanitary carriages through the zone of artillery fire.

During battle the columns also organize field feeding point and bring to the trenches not only first aid, but the trenches not only first aid, but food for the wounded who often must lie for hours before they can be removed.

that runs into Rhyolite. At the present time they are making but two or three trips each week.

Cheap, for those who won't have good; Schilling's Best for those who won't have poor—and theirs is the real economy.

It's the economy of fine coffee, its richness full-developed in roasting, blending, even grinding and removal of bitterish chaff.

It's the economy of the airtight tin, which seals in every particle of flavor the coffee develops from the hour it's roasted.
